

Moving Your Business Email to the Cloud- - It's Time!

Have you ever been at home or on vacation and needed to check your company email? Sometimes it is awkward using your smart phone or your personal PC to access your company's portal just to check your email account on your own company intranet. Sure, your PC at work is all set up to access your company email and it seems like a breeze, but when you are on the go, it is a different story. If this scenario happens to you on a regular basis, perhaps it is time to consider moving your business email to the cloud.

Business owners, salespeople and those who mainly work outside of the office are great candidates for email in the cloud. There are so many portable devices such as smart phones, netbooks, tablets and the like, it really isn't practical or efficient anymore to consider the traditional corporate intranet as the optimal channel for email communication.

Of course, safety is always a concern and cloud applications have come a long way in the past few years to address those needs. Almost everyone now has a smart phone and most feel quite comfortable accessing their own personal accounts online and business email in the cloud is really no different. People who spend a lot of time out of the office are kept better informed and are able to access their email anytime and anywhere it is convenient for them.

Improving efficiency and communication in any business setting, with an eye toward adhering to IT safety standards is a strategic move for any company.
